Voyager clears sixty-day notification window required by Health Canada to launch pods with liquid cannabis concentrates for use in Voyager's proprietary dispensers.

Voyager's proprietary dispenser is simple and precise allowing for dosing in 1 mg increments

Voyager is planning to launch two lines of pods with liquid cannabis concentrate for sublingual use and beverage infusion applications

TORONTO, Ontario Voyager Products, a Health Tech company focused on precise dosing of liquid concentrates, is pleased to announce that it has passed the minimum sixty-day notification window required by Health Canada under the Cannabis Regulations before releasing a new product to market.

Voyager's business model evolves around its proprietary dispenser which is designed to dispense liquid concentrates in 1 mg increments at very high accuracy intended for use in Pharma, Health & Wellness, Psychedelics and Cannabis. The dispenser works with pods made available by a network of partners with their own formulations, brands and distribution network.

Cannabis is the first market to satisfy the need for cannabis curious consumers who do not want to smoke or vape and are concerned with having the appropriate potency that is tailored to their needs. Current oil and tincture bottles use syringes and or droppers which are not as accurate and are cumbersome to use.

Voyager will also make available a product line of fast dissolving oils to be used in any beverage with rapid onset. This allows consumers to discreetly consume cannabis with their preferred beverage at their preferred potency.

"We are excited about achieving this important milestone which will pave the way for our national expansion in Canada" says Giovanni Gerbolini, COO, Voyager.
